I'm 100% certain this is glaze fuckery but the delivery of "it's bleeding! It's possessed." is absolutely the best thing

immabethehero Follow

Bad paint?

weepingredwillow Follow

That's a Time Bomb/Biohazard!!!

The glaze on the inside and outside of the Jug has developed cracks which when the Water is added causes the darker red clay under the white glaze to absorb the water. This in turn makes the Jug "Sweat" or "Bleed". But it also compromises the integrity of the Jug as the Clay inside is becoming soggy as it absorbs the water. It's also a breeding ground for Bacteria and Mold as the Clay can't properly dry inside the glaze.

So it's either going to fall apart and shatter into a bizillion little pieces.

Or it's going to become a rancid smelling object that would Poison anything that Drinks/Absorbs the water put inside it.

All Islamic libraries in the Middle Ages

We must remember the library of Baghdad and Cordoba

markwateneymemorialcrater Follow

Remember. The library of Alexandria always made copies of all thier texts and sent them out to other libraries. So we didn't actually lose that much with the sacking of the library of Alexandria because copies existed elsewhere. The library of Baghdad was thrown into to river when Ghengis Khan invaded. As far as I'm aware, most works stored there were unique. Carthage also had a significant library that was obliterated along with the rest of the city by the romans. We know very little about the Carthage culture as a result.

The post with the free PDF of Stone Butch Blues is circulating again, and I've failed to see anyone mention this, so: Yes, Leslie Feinberg is an LGBT+ icon and hir novel is an indispensable piece of history that has helped so many lesbians and transmascs understand the cultural context of their identities. I am not arguing against that. However, it contains at least seven or eight, more if I recall correctly, rape scenes and references to rape and sexual assault within the first like 100 pages alone, so if you're someone who's sensitive to that, this may not be a piece of media you can safely engage with.

The copy of Stone Butch Blues given to me by an elder ten or so years ago had all of the sexual assault scenes highlighted so that anyone reading it could either choose to skip it or at least have warning, so maybe we could do something like that for a PDF?

Maisy gets a visit
Ding-dong!
An educational pride zine based on the series by Lucy Cousins
Today Maisy's friend Charley has come for a visit! Hello, Charley!
Now what have you got there, Charley?
Ah! It's a flag! Charley is very excited to show it to Maisy.
Maisy wants to know what Charley's flag means!
IT'S A BOY!
Well Maisy, at one point, everyone thought Charley was a girl, and it made Charley feel very strange. But then Charley realized he was a boy, and now he feels much better!
What's that? It seems that Maisy wants to tell us something!
Yes, that's right, Maisy! Maisy says that some people don't feel quite like a boy or a girl, and Maisy is one of those people. Good job, Maisy! It can be scary to be who you are, but your friends will always be there to help. Charley's flag means that you love being YOU!

On the last day of pride month, I thought I'd share the little fake Maisy book I made when I started thinking about how much comfort thinking of Maisy as non-binary brings me! In a perfect world I think there really could be books that taught young kids about gay and trans people- I mean, it's clearly possible. Maybe someday!

{ID - pages from a pride zine based on Maisy, the cute little mouse character made by Lucy Collins. The title is, "Maisy gets a visit"
1 - Cover. Maisy is sitting down and holding a book, looking towards the sound of a doorbell ringing, 'Ding-dong!' Hanging in Maisy's window is a rainbow flag.
2 - Maisy greets their friend, Charley, a green crocodile, who smiles down at them.
'Today Maisy's friend Charley has come for a visit! Hello, Charley!'
2 - Charley goes into his bag, searching for something.
'Now what have you got there, Charley?'
3 - Charley presents a trans pride flag with a grin.
'Ah! It's a flag! Charley is very excited to show it to Maisy.'
4 - Maisy looks up curiously.
'Maisy wants to know what Charley's flag means.'
5 - A younger Charley dances in front of an 'It's a boy!' sign as his parents look on in delight.

BUSINESS INSIDER YOUR MONEY

How one 31-year-old paid off $220,000 in student loans in 3 years

Emmie Martin
Mar. 8, 2017, 12:40 PM 105,941

Back home in Joliet, Illinois, Horton took a job as an operations manager at the nonprofit her mother runs. The salary was comparable to what she made in DC, but the cost of living was drastically less. She increased her student-loan payments, setting the lofty goal of paying them off entirely in a year.

Horton and her boyfriend tied the knot soon after the move. Horton's mother gave the couple a condo that she had purchased at an auction as a wedding gift. It became crucial in wiping away the hefty student-loan tab.

Horton and her husband lived in the condo for three months, but then they decided to move in with her grandparents down the street and started renting out the condo to bring in extra income.

To anyone who feels overwhelmed by the prospect of taking on student loans — or paying back any debt they've incurred — Horton has a simple message: "I just want them to feel empowered that they can pay if off. If I can do it, anybody can."

the funniest parts of midnight sun with spoilers obviously

- when Edward first smells Bella it takes him two pages of inner monologue before he thinks of holding his breath
- apparently vampires can run so fast they don't leave footprints in snow just like LotR elves and this is physics nonsense
- Edward listening to a CD of "violent music"
- "a word I'd never said before in the presence of a lady" ajlskdflj
- Alice to Jasper: "I know you love me. Thanks."
- "And then my conscience smote me."
- "She was offended by my teasing. I must have done it wrong again."
- the "dazzling" moments from the original book are Edward fruitlessly trying to frighten people by baring his teeth I can't deal
- when Bella points this out he thinks "I'm losing my edge"
- Edward worries about whether Bella thinks he's pretty
- Bella wears a shirt "cut low enough to reveal her collarbones"
- Edward literally thinks the sparkling will horrify and disgust her
- "I avoided the word 'sex' because she did" OH GROW UP
- "It was enlightening and alluring to watch her in her element" IS THE INTRODUCTION TO A PARAGRAPH OF HER MAKING CHEERIOS
- the book. includes. a car chase.
- during the car chase they knock off the side mirrors and EMMETT AND JASPER LOOK OUT THE WINDOWS SO EDWARD CAN READ THEIR MINDS AS REPLACEMENT SIDE

MIRRORS this isn't stated in the book but I like to imagine they stuck their heads all the way out like happy dogs

Kinda like me, her mistake that weighed her down like an anchor, crushing her dreams and ruining her life. Anyway, you know how it is, you ruin your mother's life by being born so you devote yourself to catering to her hand and foot to make up for your existence. Also I hate birthdays because despite calling my mom my best friend she knows nothing about me and birthdays were about her ignoring my wishes and me having to pretend to like gifts she gave me that I clearly would not like. But it's ok, it's not like I'm going to be going back to visit ever, there's no room in that three bedroom house for me to sleep because both guest bedrooms were taken over by her hobbies. It costs you literally nothing to leave service dogs the fuck alone.

yall. this isn't a joke. if i can tell a 5 yr old "my dog is working, please let her be" and they understand then you can too. those dogs ARE working. they have a job to do. and when we say 'leave them alone' that includes making faces at them and baby talking them. literally act like they are just someone's bag or something. if you distract them they could fail to alert their owner to a seizure or blood sugar issue or allergen. you are literally jeopardizing someone's life bc you can't have basic decency, respect, and self control.

Y'all literally do not care how many disabled people you kill and how many disabled lives you ruin - you want to coo at and pet the cute dog.

Go fuck yourself asshole.

princecharmingtobe Follow

Here, if you want a comparison that isn't an object: I worked as a caregiver for people with developmental (usually accompanied by physical) disabilities. My job was to accompany them into the community for various activities including shopping, dining, and leisure activities. And everywhere we went people would come up to ME and tell me what a good person I was, what a great service I was providing, god bless me, etc.
Not only was it embarrassing for both me and my consumers, it was distracting! I was supposed to be paying attention to my consumers and their needs, which could often change rapidly depending on their conditions, and instead I was having to deal with some prick who felt the need to voice what a martyr I was for doing my job. And they'd usually get angry if I ignored them or informed them they were distracting me from my job, which sounds familiar.

So yeah. Leave. The Dog. Alone. All you're doing is making yourself feel good while distracting the dog from its job and endangering the person it's supposed to be helping.

doodle333 Follow

Question: I know service dogs are for a variety of maladies (I hope that's not offensive, if so plz correct me) so is it wrong to even go up to the person and calmly tell them their dog is cute and ask them to give them a pet for me later when they're off the clock? Without actually giving the dog attention?

phoenixonwheels Follow

What exactly is it about "Ignore the dog. Do not mention the dog." that y'all aren't grasping.

Oh right. It's not what you want to do so you're just going to keep trying to weasel your way around it. Because fuck disabled people, it's a cute dog.

I just left my husband alone with our two children for sixteen days. I was not worried about anything regarding the house, their food, or their wellbeing. I put all the appointments in the family calendar and my husband checked it and kept them. I literally did not worry about them. I missed them, and I was sad that they missed me, but I didn’t worry about them AT ALL. I need to impress upon you all that I missed their company, but was not worried for their welfare.

I also did no meal prep. I don’t even think I went shopping right before I left.

This is not about apples and oranges. This isn’t even about my husband. This is about the fact that this is apparently WEIRD.

Another mum at my daughter’s school is leaving for ten days. She’s taking her youngest (who is a very small baby) and leaving her husband with their two girls. She has been cooking for days preparing freezer meals. She’s panicking and deputizing her six year old to remind him how to make school lunches. AND I AM APPALLED.

A) He is definitely not helpless. (He's a doctor or something.) What gendered bullshit. B) THAT LITTLE GIRL IS NOT OLD ENOUGH TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR HER AND HER SISTER'S WELLBEING. WHAT THE ACTUAL FUCK. C) Why is she married to this person and creating children with him if he's this big of an idiot?

While she was laughingly recounting this, the other mums were nodding and smiling sympathetically, like oh yes, I too have my caveman at home!! Such managing required! I was the only one who was like "Dude, he'll be fine. Literally. He will be fine." I said it a lot. She was not convinced. She kept bringing up her older daughter. She'll be like a little mum!

NO.

NO NO NO NO.

NO.

Straight women, don't do this shit. It's gross. Don't infantilize your husbands and then expect your daughters to pick up the slack. So fucking gross. So. So. GROSS.

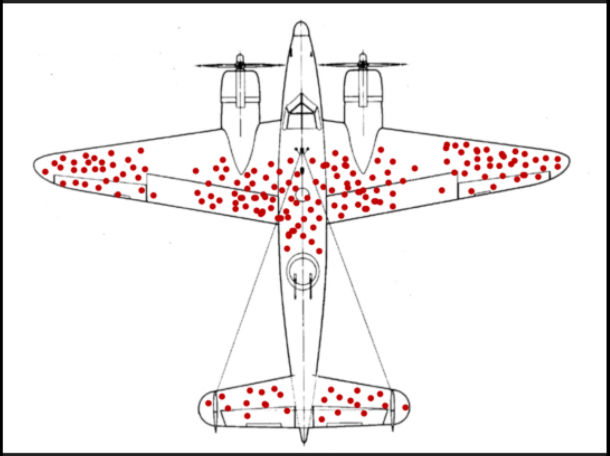
This is a picture tracking bullet holes on Allied planes that encountered Nazi anti-aircraft fire in WW2.



At first, the military wanted to reinforce those areas, because obviously that's where the ground crews observed the most damage on returning planes. Until Hungarian-born Jewish mathematician Abraham Wald pointed out that this was the damage on the planes that made it home, and the Allies should armor the areas where there are no dots at all, because those are the places where the planes won't survive when hit. This phenomenon is called survivorship bias, a logic error where you focus on things that survived when you should really be looking at things that didn't.

We have higher rates of mental illness now? Maybe that's because we've stopped killing people for being "possessed" or "witches." Higher rate of allergies? Anaphylaxis kills, and does so really fast if you don't know what's happening. Higher claims of rape? Maybe victims are less afraid of coming forward. These problems were all happening before, but now we've reinforced the medical and social structures needed to help these people survive. And we still have a long way to go.

twodotsknowwhy Follow

This is one of my favorite anecdotes to show how clever rewording of statistics can make them say the opposite of what they mean:

Every time a state makes riding a motorcycle without a helmet illegal, the number of ER patients seriously injured in motorcycle accidents skyrockets. Every single time.

When you phrase it just right, it makes it sound like it's more dangerous to ride a motorcycle with a helmet than without one. Of course, the reality is that before those laws, those patients were going to the morgue, not the ER.

Man Strolling with a Boy Carrying Flowering Branch, Kitagawa Fujimaro, c. 1810, Cleveland Museum of Art: Japanese Art

A young man strolls in front of a boy carrying flowering plum branches, perhaps symbolic of spring. The colors and patterns in the boy's clothing, along with the plum branches at the edge of the painting, introduce an element of movement and surprise. This image is similar to the composition of Courtesans and Attendants by Engetsudo (see 1985.255). The poem inscribed at the top reads: The full blooming cherry is not the only flower worth mentioning. The color of the young plum tree blooms as well. The Japanese word for color, iro, is a double entendre for love or sex. The full blooming cherry refers to the mature female courtesans of the Yoshiwara district of Edo (Tokyo), while the young plum refers to handsome young men, who the poet suggests one not overlook in the pursuit of pleasure. Kitagawa Fujimaro was a disciple of renowned painter and print designer Kitagawa Utamaro (1753?–1806).
Size: Overall: 180.4 × 48.3 cm (71 × 19 in.); Painting only: 94 × 31 cm (37 × 12 3/16 in.)

I don't think anyone talks about the specific trauma of growing up autistic and not being able to read social signals tbh - at least it's not something I've seen talked about.

It's talked about sometimes in the context of abuse trauma that people who have it feel like they're walking on eggshells because they grew up with unpredictable people who could go off at any moment(and I'm in this group as well), but what has to be understood is that for many autistic people, the entire world is like that. All people are unpredictable to us - we can't read social cues. It's not just a matter of being awkward, we can't do it. We have no way of reading the signs that someone's getting annoyed, or wants us to leave, or is "just being polite", so as kids, we push and push past every signal because we can't see them, and then, seemingly out of the blue, we're getting snapped/shouted at and we have no way of understanding why or how to avoid it next time.

It's traumatic, and it stays with you - there's a reason some autistic people tend to be shy and withdrawn, or develop social anxiety. We learn at a very early age that everyone is unpredictable and could snap at any moment, and we don't know how to feel it out at all, so eventually, it becomes safer just to not interact at all. We can't see the boundaries, and we don't want to get our hearts broken, so we pull back, we don't message first, we wait for others to make the first move, we follow, we copy, we mask, but we never assume. And that weight carries into adulthood - it carries to friendships, romantic relationships, professional relationships, and every other form of interaction we have. Those times we've been startled by anger or caught off guard by irritation stick so deep in us and it's not just something you shake off and forget.

Allythegreat1 on AO3 left this as a comment: "Can you please write me a gift where Agnarr realizes he's smitten with Iduna and leaves her flowers on her nightstand in her castle guest room?"

GIF by hafanforever

The crocus meant Arendelle, a purple one meant the King in particular. If the Greeks were to be believed, it was Krokus, turned into a flower for all eternity, the end result of an unhappy love affair.

But Agnarr did not want that for his fate, for theirs. So he added red tulips for love and honeysuckle for its sweet smell in the clutch of flowers he took from the hot house.

These same flowers might bloom as early as March if he waited to gather them from the hills but Iduna was here now, in the castle, making a guest room her own, and he would welcome her with a show of affection she would not be able to understand yet, but by spring, she would.

Works as a companion to this 5 sentence fic from @jomiddlemarch. Thank you @the-spaztic-fantastic for always saying yes when I ask you to read something and for adding in (or taking away) the right number of commas.

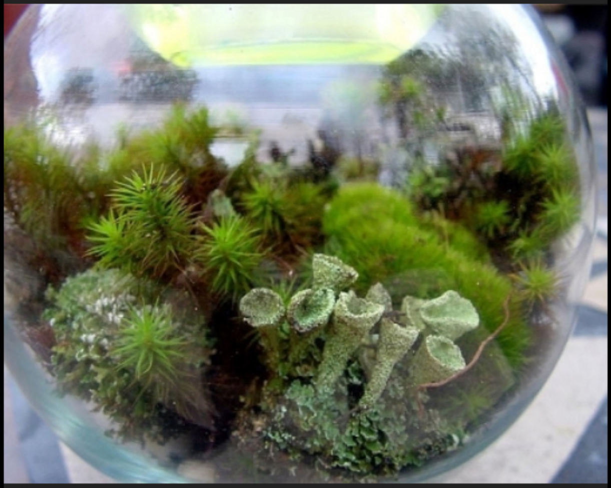
I notice there's a thriving "moss terrarium" market on the internet but I take one look at their photos and I can tell almost all of them just grabbed a bunch of moss from outside, photographed in a jar and put it up for sale the same day.



I'm not singling anybody out here, this is just the first photo I grabbed that demonstrates what I'm talking about: most of the things you see here are doomed to rot. The cool lichens in the foreground absolutely cannot live in perpetual moisture and still air. The other mosses are also probably species that will turn into gross brown slime if they can't enjoy distinct seasons in the open. Furthermore if any of these things had been growing in a bowl, they would probably be pointing in the same direction (towards the lamp or window they'd been under) and have whispier, longer shapes.

Some youtubers like serpadesigns are serious about this stuff and have good advice. Personally if I were using my etsy to sell "moss terrariums" I would absolutely not sell one that hadn't already been growing and proving itself well-established for at least months. I have so many that have been growing steadily for up to a year now. More than I even have room for! IF ONLY there was something I could do with them all!!!!

(Do I dare undermine etsy's moss-murder ring?)

"You like children's cartoons because of the safety net of a happy ending but real art isn't all happiness and rainbows"

I mean….Yeah? It is nice knowing that all that struggle is worth it in the end. That my favorite character isn't going to die suddenly because of shock value or be raped or whatever else.

Is it my fault that 9/10 'adult' shows have at least an episode or two that is only there to be shocking for literally no reason? That I hate when sex and violence take over the storylines ? Too much media ends up feeling the same when the opinion of shocking violence is handed to them. ￼￼￼

she-ra-cat-ra Follow

Also!

Considering that a lot of kid show fandoms are made up of lesbians/bi woman I can't help but feel like that is a big part of this dislike.

You know how hard it is to find good WLW stories?? If you get rid of the over sexualized stuff and the ones where one woman is killed you're left with about three movies and none of them of come out in the past 10 years. ￼

So yeah, ￼I take comfort in￼￼ knowing Catra wasn't going to be killed in the last episode. I take comfort in knowing The Owl House isn't going to kill of Amity with a stray bullet. I take comfort in knowing Steven Universe would have never killed Ruby ￼just for Sapphire to turn evil.

'Real art has some pain'

Well guess what asshole? I don't want 'real art' if it means seeing woman being killed and raped. I would rather watch a cartoon where I know none of that will happen.

meljane7

It's not like children's media doesn't have pain either. Even knowing that everything turns out alright in the end, it's still painful watching Catra and Adora fight when I rewatch She-Ra. Marceline's story in Stakes dealt with loss and depression in a way that still brings me to tears. Children's media often deals with (women's) pain in a much more honest and realistic way than adult media, which often exaggerates and specifically puts female characters through absolute hell purely for the theatrics of it. So much of the pain female characters (especially wlw and trans women) experience on shows like Game of Thrones feels voyeuristic, much more an expression of male fantasy than female reality. So yeah, I prefer children's cartoons.

So, a few years ago, my mom got us stuck in a quiet big debt. We paid more than half of it. But it still left a lot of money.

And the worst of it is, if we don't pay the debt, creditors will take my grandma's house away (because it is a pledge).

We all strangling so much. My grandma has a heart disease. And I have a panic attacks all the time.

So if you can help with donation or with sharing this, I will be infinitely grateful ❤️ You can save not just our house, but our family too.

"There is no ethical consumption under capitalism"
The statement is not a demand people starve in the streets. It is a condemnation of individual attempts to buy their way out of the capitalist destruction of both the environment and human lives. Such destruction can only be stopped through widespread institutional changes - the abolition of growing profits as the metric of success.

"There is no ethical residence under colonialism"
Is a re-application of the above with an emphasis on indigenous sovereignty. Individuals choosing to live in a cottage, a studio apartment, urban or rural life - these choices have no inherent virtue as long as indigenous people have no say in the matter. Only through the abolition of colonial authority over land usage will we be able to move past this injustice.

The point of getting rid of the death penalty isn't that there are some innocent people on it. The point of prison abolition isn't that there are some innocent people in prison.

The point is that the state shouldn't have the power to kill people. The point is that the prison system commits systemic abuses of human rights, doesn't reduce crime, is deeply racist, and doesn't take the desires of the victims into account. To argue about whether one individual on death row or with a life sentence is innocent or guilty is just a distraction from the central issues, which is that these institutions are unjust and should not exist

For non stop (two years) To still have time in yourself to be kind and giving even though your life is physically painful & exhausting/ never knowing if today is the day, and having your body fail you whilst being at the mercy of strangers to hopefully care enough to keep u alive, then being too broke and having to decide between rent, food, or meds, bills ect. THEN to have that thrown to the wind and having to pay double $$ and STILL BEING KIND while also trying to mentally comprehend what this fully means while in complete PTSD SURVIVAL MODE. While ALSO PREPARING FOR SURGERY/s ✨✨ THENNN being fucked over the same week your told you might have cancer and being put immediately on meds that might make you go blind. Mmmmk

"Aw man! This pie doesn't taste at all like what grandma use to make! I'm must be a terrible baker:("

Maybe! Or maybe one of many things might be different from the recipe you've been trying to follow

Baking is largely both a science, and bullshit. Anything from the altitude you're at, or the mosture in the air, or the way you're measuring ingredients (ie weight vs volume) can effect how your final result of what you're making will come out. A few examples just in my grandmother's Apple Pie recipe are

- Her recipe calls for Crisco in the crust, but Crisco changed their formula in 2007, effecting the taste and texture of the crusts made, so adjustments have to be made to account for that
- The Apple tree in her backyard is gone, and no apples sold commonly in stores are similar to whatever random variety she had, and there are over 7,500 known varieties of apples
- Not all flour that you buy from the store is the same, and I'm not just even talking about like. Cake flour vs wheat flour. Even in the US the kind of regular baking flour differs depending on where you live, and where it's sourced from

So will I ever make that Apple pie I remember fondly from my childhood? Probably not! Just gotta figure out my own thing that works.

I dunno why I made this post at 6am. Just shit to keep in mind next time you're struggling with an older recipe I guess!

Needed to see this. Thank you :)

fun fact that my family has a sugar cookie recipe that has been passed down AT LEAST since my great, great grandmother, and it calls for 3-4 cups flour... now we use at least 6 cups, plus whatever we put on the rolling pin.

From the Kickstarter: "Today, Durham is without a Black-owned bookselling storefront and the handful of bookstores in the area do not, at present, offer an expansive cross-genre collection of Black literature. This is the gap that Rofhiwa hopes to fill: (1) creating a space for collective imagining, where children and adults may find and share stories that reflect who they are (2) fostering the convivial atmosphere that is seminal to creating the bookcafé as a communal space (3) offering a deep collection of works by Black writers that invites readers to explore what it means to be Black here, over there and everywhere where Black people make life."
